Will my child be vaccinated at school?

This question was posed repeated throughout 2021.

Due to some practices in other countries and/or other states in Australia it has again been posed this year.

It does not appear in the list of Department of Education's "Frequently Asked Questions" at this time.

The answer common to state schools, including Broadbeach, is:

Currently there is no COVID-19 vaccination program in Queensland state schools and we have been assured by Queensland Health that there are no plans to mandate COVID-19 vaccinations for school children.

If, in the future, Queensland state school students are included in the roll-out of COVID-19 vaccines on school sites, it is expected that the program would be managed by an authorised immunisation provider (not the school). In line with current practice, vaccinations would only be given to students who have their parent/carer's consent to receive them.
